digits of the credit or debit card and the respective expiration dates on printed receipts it issued to its customers.

4. During the Settlement Class Period of August 22, 2016 to September 6, 2018, Fastenal had approximately 1,061,508 credit and debit card transactions where a consumer credit card or consumer debit card may have been used.

5. Of these transactions, approximately 314,580 involved the use of a consumer credit card or consumer debit card, and some of the remaining 746,928 transactions, may have also involved the use of a consumer credit card or consumer debit card. There is no practical way to determine whether these 746,928 transactions involved consumer cards or business cards.

6. Thus, the number of transactions during the Settlement Class Period where a consumer credit card or consumer debit card was used ranges from approximately 314,580 to approximately 1,061,508.

7. The transaction data base does not include identification information pertaining to Fastenal customers. Therefore, Fastenal cannot access information which would enable it to determine, the postal addresses, email addresses or facsimile numbers of putative class members.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California, that the foregoing is true and correct.

Executed this July 1, 2019, in Winona, Minnesota
